Ok grumpy folks, what not to like about this place. Its funky without any pretensions vibe, reasonably priced (for a vintage shop) and has a pretty kick ass collection of vintage gear for both guys and gals.

Now some folk (grumpy folk) ain't to keen on the new breed of vintage shops that are popping up in the west end, you know, the kind of shops that are well advertised, consistent in layout, price and quality, accessible to all people and not just wizards and not manned by staff who scare you off with their perfectly vintage appearance....

If you find yourself in this category then, please go away.....i'm getting old and my patience for people that annoy me is wearing thin so just go away now before i either break down in tears or try to tie you to one of the vintage guru mannequins with a 1970's scarf from the men's section.

This is my ideal of a vintage store. Its well laid out, clean, reasonably priced and very welcoming. Not old style, thank god. I like.

Another funky retro store.. Just what we need?

Something like that, I believe, is the general consensus. I'm getting old though, I don't have my thumb as firmly on the pulse of the collective consciousness of Glasgow as I like to think I did once upon a time.

It's a cracking shop though, no arguments and is open quite late which can only suggest that business wise, it is doing well.

Their USP (unique selling point to the uninitiated) is hard to judge, being that it pretty much does the same job as any other retro-style clothing emporium like Mr. Benn.

By comparison though, this place is on a much better location and has an infinitely more appealing interior.

Worth a look see.

I really like this vintage shop. The exterior is super cute and draws you in and when inside it doesnt disappoint. I felt totally at ease browsing here (whereas some other vintage shops can be quite uncomfortable) and found the layout to be easy to navigate. Everything has the size on the hanger and the prices are clearly displayed.

Perhaps I'm not a true vintage shopper and so the fact this shop appears so new and modern is almost appealing to me. But I think it's more to do with the stock - they have some absolute beauties in here. I saw a few gorgeous tops (oh-so-vintage) and a really beautiful jacket (that I didnt need) and I struggled with my conscience over whether to purchase them.

It was really busy when I was in with people constantly trying things on - perhaps because of its location. A little vintage treasure chest which I'd give the big thumbs up.

Vintage shops are becoming ten-a-penny nowadays, however, places like Vintage Guru stick out like sore thumbs.

A new addition on Byres Road, this vintage shop is pretty darn sweet. It does seem to lack that old-style, old clothing smell, so it doesn't really have the atmosphere of any regular vintage shop, but in a way it's quite nice - it's very clean and tidy and BUSY! Mega mega BUSY! It's been staying open till 8pmish to meet demand!

Make sure you go early to avoid disappointment - the stuff in the window is no exception to this rule. God knows where they are getting the clothes from, but they're all of high quality, and of decent price, so I'd advise a trip, just to see what all the fuss is about!
